

Attention Deficit Disorder and Attention Deficit Hyperactivity Disorder

ADD/ADHD & Other Learning Disabilities

Hyperactive behavior and learning disorders are very serious – at least one child in every classroom in the US is affected by one form of these disorders. A Mayo clinical study shows that children have a 7.5% chance of being diagnosed with ADHD between the ages of 5 and 18. Even worse, studies are now showing that 3 to 7% of all adults in the US may be afflicted with ADHD. ADD (Attention Deficit Disorder) is marked by short attention spans and slow learning, usually attributed to dyslexia. ADHD (Attention Deficit Hyperactivity Disorder) is ADD accompanied by hyperactivity. ADHD exhibits extreme emotional instability, with aggressive destructive behavior. Victims may also become chronic liars and have difficulty listening, following instructions or finishing tasks. Most exhibit stress syndromes like chronic thirst, colds, sneezing, and coughing.
